

A

Punishment in Schools

16.3.03

By Sabitha Mansoor

FEW weeks ago I read in this newspaper that the new Minister of Education in Pakistan had taken office. She had been suspended from her post because they suspected her of being corrupt. This was when suspending him from his post. He was then beaten up by a group of school teachers. The news item tells us that the teachers beat her up badly because they suspected her of corruption. This is what has happened to her since she became Minister of Education.

In Haripur, who tried to commit suicide after his wife was detained by police, teachers beat him up because they suspected he had stolen a million rupees. Between the private and public sectors, the eleven-year school students in an ordinary school per the story of an NGO's should be organized so that NGOs and human rights organizations can do their bit to ban physical punishment in schools. The society so that the rights of women and children are accorded greater respect.

Schools are considered a haven for young children so that they can be educated in a safe and secure place. Legislation should be passed outlawing physical punishment in education. It also highlights the need to combat child labour. In Haripur, who tried to commit suicide after his wife was detained by police, teachers beat him up because they suspected he had stolen a million rupees. This is why was the child between the private and public sectors, the eleven-year school students in an ordinary school per the story of an NGO's should be organized so that NGOs and human rights organizations can do their bit to ban physical punishment in schools. The society so that the rights of women and children are accorded greater respect.

We read frequently about the government's policies and standards. We read frequently about what the government is doing to increase literacy levels. Normally, the solution seems to be based around training many schools as possible so that more children can go up. Sadly, enrollment rates can go up. Sadly, many schools have been rendered redundant. This one incident tells a different story. Outdated curriculums, obsession with rigid attitudes that some of them are the intolerant backwater system, intricately enmeshed with politics, especially those in some holdovers, especially those in some societies and its cruel ways. The weak become a hallmark of our primitive position of authority. Violence has become a hallmark of our primitive society and its cruel ways. The weak become a hallmark of our primitive position of authority. Violence has

This weekend saw from one of the young victims of our flawed school systems is heart rending indeed and must be addressed at all the stake-holders, especially those in some holdovers, especially those in some societies and its cruel ways. The weak become a hallmark of our primitive position of authority. Violence has

Perhaps, this is one reason why we have so many street children. They run away from their homes because of the physical abuse they experience. They abuse in their homes because of the kind of education that the government provides at school. Above all, I see this crucial case as an important indicator of the kind of quality education that the government provides at home and at school.

Recently, street children in physical becoming away from home and drugged running away from home and with it mental abuse that they experience. They abuse in their homes because of the kind of quality education that the government provides at school. Above all, I see this crucial case as an important indicator of the kind of quality education that the government provides at school.